At Frostig School, We Are Committed to Preparing Students For Success.

This guide was prepared in order to share information with students and families at Frostig as well as those in the community who are seeking support in finding success after high school. All programs at Frostig use the Success Attributes model as a framework to facilitate understanding of skills necessary for success in adulthood. The Success Attributes represent a set of skills that were identified by a 20-year longitudinal study conducted by The Frostig Center with former Frostig Students. We work to instill these values and develop these skills in students at all levels and at every age. For more information on the Success Attributes studies and corresponding literature and resources, please visit our website at www.frostig.org.

The Success Attributes are:

- Self –Awareness: Recognizing one's strengths and weaknesses and matching these to a particular career path or life activities. Self-awareness also involves the ability to develop understanding and acceptance of one's learning differences and challenges.
- Proactivity: Engaging in the world and having a sense of control over one's life decisions. Proactivity includes taking responsibility and ownership of one's actions, and understanding one's role in both positive and negative life circumstances.
- Perseverance: Working through difficulties without giving up, while also knowing when to be flexible and shift one's goals.
- Goal-Setting: Identifying realistic goals and being able to break down the steps necessary to achieve them.
- Use of Support Systems: Reaching out for help as needed, self-advocating, and not over-relying on support. Being able to identify the right person to ask in a particular situation.
- Emotional Coping Strategies: Developing ways to manage strong feelings so they don't get in the way of achieving one's life goals. Managing stress specifically related to learning challenges is also important.

FrostigBeyond

In addition, Frostig provides transition services to young adults ages 16-24 through our post-secondary program, Frostig Beyond. Launched in the fall of 2014, this program provides individualized services to assist teens and young adults in reaching their post- secondary goals. Frostig Beyond supports students in the three main areas of transition: Education & Training, Employment and Independent Living. Services are available on the Frostig campus or out in the community as needed by each participant. A flexible array of services is available. Please contact us at (626) 791-1255 or email jennifer@frostig.org for further details.

Guiding Principles for Success in Transition

These Guiding Principles were collaboratively developed by the Frostig School team in an effort to provide concrete suggestions to parents on how to help facilitate the development of Success Attributes in our students.

Allow struggle to build strength.

It is so tempting to want to save our kids, especially when they struggle in many areas. But they have to "exercise this muscle" to face future challenges. Look for opportunities to engage your child or young adult in problem-solving, working through challenges, and changing course when necessary.

Chores for everyone!

Developmentally appropriate responsibilities can provide so much opportunity for growth. By having consistent responsibilities at home your child or young adult can: learn important independent living skills, develop a sense of accomplishment, contribute to the family, earn rewards or money toward desired items, and form the foundation of their work ethic.

We all have our stuff.

If you have a child with a disability or challenge, it is important that you create a culture in your family where challenges are accepted and differences are celebrated. Encourage open discussions around difficulties and help your child or young adult set realistic goals where they can find success.

Turn interests into opportunities.

Pay close attention to what motivates your child or young adult. How do they like to spend their time? What do they talk about? What do they ask for when they want something? Support their interests to help them identify goals for their future.

Break down what happens behind the scenes.

So much happens for kids as if by magic. The lunch box appears, fully stocked and ready to go. They get whisked away to doctor's appointments and dentist visits. They arrive at movies on time, play dates are scheduled, and of course all the bills are paid on time. Find ways to involve your child or young adult in these processes.

Ask caring questions- about others.

Look for opportunities to bring perspective-taking into your everyday conversations. Use TV and movies to ask what a particular character is thinking or feeling, or ask them why they think a child you see in the community might be crying. This will give them practice for situations that are more personal to them.

Encourage new experiences.

Our kids love their comfort zones. The more opportunities your child or young adult has outside their regular school and home routine the more chances they have to develop new skills. This also is huge in preparing them for the future if they go to a different school and when they graduate.

Let the world in.

Help your child or young adult to become informed about what is going on in our community and in the world. Encourage discussion about cultural issues and current events. Don't forget to ask what they think.

A note from the Frostig Transition Team:

This resource guide was compiled for the purpose of gathering a comprehensive (though certainly not exhaustive) collection of resources for transition aged teens and young adults. Information regarding the programs herein was collected from promotional materials for each program. This information is provided for parents and students as a resource, not as a referral. Students and families are encouraged to conduct their own additional research including setting up tours and meetings with program representatives in order to evaluate any programs of interest and to find the appropriate program. Another great way to evaluate programs is to ask to speak to participants and/or parents of current or former participants of the program, if this is an option. The Frostig Center and its employees do not endorse any of the non Frostig programs, resources or organizations provided in this guide.

This guide was first created by Rita Zobayan, and has been updated by the Frostig transition team with extra help from graduate social work interns Iveta Petrosyan and Casey Roberts from California State University at Northridge. The information herein is ever-changing and necessitates continuous updates. Please send suggestions or edits to jennifer@frostig.org.

College Excel (Bend, OR)

Our private, residential program helps students build personal and academic confidence while they earn a college degree. In addition to our program, students enroll in the local community college or Oregon State's Cascade Campus for additional courses. And every step of the way, they receive guidance from our professors, coaches and learning specialists. College Excel provides a highly collaborative community where students learn to cultivate the internal motivation and confidence they need to succeed in college and life. And we don't use a cookie cutter approach. Instead, we personally work with each student to unlock this desire. They all have it. Many of our students have previously failed or dropped out of college, but they're all bright. They all want to do better, even if they don't know how yet. That's where we come in, and why we were selected as one of the top 15 coaching practices by a panel of internationally recognized leaders in the field of personal transformation. Our students go on to leading universities, amazing careers and meaningful lives. We help them get there, but the desire is already inside of them. We just bring it to the surface.
